5. Angkot (angkutan umum)

Angkot is short for angkutan kota (means city transportation). Bandung uses different colors for cars servicing different routes. It usually consists of 3 stripes : the base, the body (main color), and a small stripe to separate them. Almost all of them use the color reen for at least one stripe, representing the city's slogan Clean, Green, dan Flowery.

You can download Kiri.travel to know the Angkot's route

The screenshot shows the KIRI website's search interface. At the top is the KIRI logo, which consists of a stylized 'K' made of two overlapping squares (one purple, one blue) followed by the word 'KIRI' in blue. Below the logo are two dropdown menus: the first is labeled 'Bandung' and the second is labeled 'English'. Underneath these are two input fields: 'From:' with the placeholder text 'e.g. Stasiun' and 'To:' with the placeholder text 'e.g. Monas, Jakarta'. Below the input fields are three buttons: a blue 'Find!' button, a grey button with a double-headed vertical arrow icon, and a grey button with a circular refresh icon. At the bottom of the interface are four links: 'Mobile Apps | Old Version', 'Legal | Feedback | About KIRI'.

1. Homesickness

is the distress or impairment caused by an actual or anticipated separation from home. Its cognitive hallmark is preoccupying thoughts of home and attachment objects.

How to deal with homesickness?

Whether you're studying abroad or within your own country but still away from home, there's nothing fun about feeling homesick at university! But with a little effort, you should soon be back to enjoying your student experience.

Often the pressures of starting a new life in unfamiliar surroundings can feel too much. Being away from friends and family can be tough. But if you're starting to spend a bit too much time pining for home, follow these five tips to get your homesickness under control.

1. Get out of your room

Let's face it, there's no point sitting in your room all day feeling sorry for yourself. In fact, this will only exaggerate your homesickness and loneliness, bringing you down further. University is packed with opportunities to try new things and meet new people – take up a sport, join student clubs and societies, find a part-time job, check out the campus social calendar. With all these new activities you won't even have the time to think about missing home. Makes sense, right?

2. Keep a positive attitude

This is easier said than done, I know. But if you make the effort, it really is possible to maintain a positive attitude. Your homesickness at university isn't going to get any better if you keep dwelling on the negatives – so keep reminding yourself of all the good things about being here. You could even write a list of positive things that happen each week: new things you've learned, new opportunities you've gained, new friends you've made. And even when you feel worst, make yourself smile – it really does help. Turn that frown upside down!

3. Stay healthy

Put down those comfort foods! It's important to remember to stay healthy while you're away from home. Not only will this make you feel a lot better in yourself, it will also help boost your energy levels and improve your concentration. Besides helping to beat homesickness at university, staying healthy will also help you to avoid other illnesses, such as fresher's flu. Remember to eat well, get plenty of sleep, and regularly drink water.

4. Stay in touch with friends and family

Speaking to someone you feel close to can be an instant pick-me-up, so make sure you stay in touch with friends and family back home. Pick up the phone, use Skype or instant messaging, or even send letters and postcards. Don't keep your homesickness at university a secret; sharing any problems will help you to start feeling better. But at the same time, don't turn the conversation into an excuse to moan for an hour – remember to focus on the positives too!

5. Make use of student support services

If you're really struggling with homesickness at university, don't be afraid to make use of your university's student support services. Homesickness is completely normal, and universities are experienced in helping students settle in. Your university's student support department may offer counselling services, student mentoring programs, or be able to offer suggestions on activities you could get involved with to start you feeling more at home.

2. Culture Shock

Culture shock is the personal disorientation a person may feel when experiencing an unfamiliar way of life due to immigration or a visit to a new country, a move between social environments, or simply travel to another type of life.

How to overcome the culture shock?

1. Keep an open mind. Do not automatically perceive anything that is different to be "wrong" or "negative". Withholding judgment will allow you to be an objective observer and will facilitate the process of cross-cultural understanding. Also, if you are going to a country with which you know close to nothing about, do a little background information. As you learn about the country in which you are going to, keeping an open mind is necessary, and, who knows, you may find the reason for something you may not understand.

2. Make an effort to learn the local language.

This increases your communication skills and it helps you to integrate with the local community. It also demonstrates your interest in the new country.

3. Get acquainted with the social conduct of your new environment.

Do not assume or interpret behavior from your own cultural perspective or "filter". Behavior is not data. For example, Americans often use the phrase "How are you?" to mean "hello" or "I acknowledge your presence as I pass you in the hall." A foreigner may wonder why Americans don't respond in detail to this question about one's well-being. Thus they may interpret the behavior of walking away before one has a chance to respond to the question to be "uncaring", "superficial" or even "rude". An American knows otherwise and would probably not be offended that someone did not take the time to respond to this question.

- 4. Do not take cultural familiarity or knowledge at face-value. Even as you become more savvy about rituals, customs and protocol in your new environment, be careful not to attribute an explanation or rationale to what you now believe you know. A little bit of knowledge can be misleading. Psychologist Geert Hofstede wrote that 'culture' is like an onion that can be peeled, layer by layer, to reveal the content.^[1] It takes a long time to really understand a culture in its social and historical context.
- 5. Make sure you get to know people in your new environment. Respectfully ask questions, read newspapers, and attend a variety of festivals and events.

6. Try to achieve a sense of stability in your life. Establishing a routine will give you a feeling of safety.

7. Most importantly, maintain a sense of humor! Don't be too hard on yourself if you make a cultural gaffe or don't know what to do in a social situation. Laugh at yourself and others will laugh with you. Most individuals will admire your tenacity and effort to understand their ways, especially if you are devoid of judgment and cultural comparisons that subtly and perhaps unconsciously convey a veil of superiority.
